ON THE HORIZON

We're constantly striving to enhance Practice Perfect. And if experience has taught us anything, it's that this is done through routine software updates and new integrations. As it happens, we have a couple of these on the horizon:

Online Patient Intake Forms
We're partnering with a company called ReachLite to provide you with a service that enables you to bring your patient intake and consent forms online. This way, patients can supply you with all of their information prior to their first visit.

We're able to create customized patient intake and consent forms, host them online, and provide you with a URL (web link). From there, you can list it on your website, email it, or pull it up on a laptop or tablet in your clinic. But what happens once the form is filled out? There are three phases to this new integration.

In Phase One, completed forms will simply be emailed to you upon completion. From there, they may be printed and/or uploaded directly to the patient's 'Activities by Document'.

In Phase Two, completed forms will arrive directly in Practice Perfect without having to rely upon your email.

In Phase Three, completed intake forms for new patients will automatically create new 'Client Profiles'. The best part is that the fields in their 'Client Profile' will be partially completed based on the information collected on the intake form.

Stay tuned for more updates on this exciting new integration!

Patient self-booking
Last year, we unveiled Phase One of our patient self-booking portal. This unique feature enabled clinics to connect their Practice Perfect 'Scheduler' with an external webpage so that patients can book appointments on their own.

Our first foray into this feature had its limitations. For example, patients were only able to book appointments for their default 'Incident', and the appointment duration could not be altered.

Well, we're pleased to unveil a completely revamped version of this function that not only removes these limitations, but it will also allow us to add other new and exciting features in the near future.

If you are already using the patient self-booking function and wish to move to our new, upgraded offering, please contact our Support Department for assistance.
